INTRODUCTION

In recent years, the Islamic economy has experienced remarkable growth beyond its traditional borders, gaining substantial traction in non-Muslim majority countries. This expansion is driven by a confluence of factors, including the increasing demand for ethical and sustainable financial solutions—principles deeply embedded within Islamic finance. Rooted in risk-sharing, social responsibility, and the avoidance of interest-based transactions. Islamic finance is resonating globally with a diverse audience seeking alternative financial models.

Across various regions, we see compelling examples of this trend. Australia has made significant strides by promoting Islamic investment funds and developing superannuation products aligned with Shari'ah principles. In Germany and France, growing Muslim populations and inclusive financial policies have fostered the establishment of Islamic banking windows and halal product ecosystems. Luxembourg, known for its financial innovation, has emerged as a leading European hub for Islamic investment funds and was among the first in Europe to issue a sovereign sukuk.

In North America, both Canada and the United States are home to a rapidly expanding ecosystem of Islamic financial services, including Islamic mortgages, fintech platforms, and ethical investment funds that appeal to Muslim and non-Muslim consumers alike. Across the Atlantic, Brazil is actively exploring Islamic finance to support agribusiness and infrastructure, particularly in its international trade relations.

In Asia, Thailand is enhancing its halal infrastructure in food, tourism, and finance, aiming to become a leading halal economy in the region. Meanwhile, Russia is taking steps toward integrating Islamic economy into its broader financial system, with the government actively exploring regulatory frameworks for Sukuk issuance and promoting halal products to cater to its growing Muslim population. The Kazan Summit has played a crucial role in this development, acting as a key platform for promoting the halal industry, Islamic finance, and Islamic-related education. This summit has significantly contributed to raising the profile of Islamic economic principles within Russia and the broader region.

South Africa is positioning itself as a significant player in the Islamic finance sector in Africa, hosting one full-fledged Islamic bank and other conventional banks that have Islamic windows. This development provides an opportunity to grow the industry within an environment that is receptive to and welcoming of Islamic banking tools and products. The regulatory framework for Islamic finance continues to evolve, attracting investors from across the continent and beyond. Additionally, South Africa's Islamic economy is supported by key non-profitable sectors such as Zakah, Waqf, and philanthropy, which contribute significantly to social welfare and economic development. These sectors provide essential services, support community development, and promote sustainability, creating a holistic Islamic economy that extends beyond financial transactions.

In India, the potential for Islamic finance is gaining attention, particularly in the form of ethical banking and investment solutions, as the country explores ways to integrate Islamic financial principles into its vast and diverse economy. India has also exported to the world some of the most prominent scholars who, through different generations, have worked tirelessly to write and develop the economic and financial knowledge of the Islamic economy on various scales. Their contributions have played a pivotal role in the global understanding and advancement of Islamic economic thought.

Importantly, Magasid al-Shari'ah—the higher objectives of Islamic law—form the foundational values upon which modern sustainability frameworks such as ESG (Environmental, Social, and Governance) and the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) are built. The protection and preservation of life (nafs), intellect ('aql), wealth (maal), faith (deen), and future generations (nasl) are not only central to Islamic economic thought, but also directly reflected in today's global development goals.

Islamic finance instruments—such as sukuk—are now widely used to fund projects that advance environmental protection, social justice, and ethical governance. This confirms that the Islamic economy is not a parallel system, but a deeply rooted and proactive contributor to the global pursuit of inclusive, sustainable, and values-driven development.

In this evolving landscape, a new wave of Muslim entrepreneurs and startups is playing a transformative role—developing Shari'ah-compliant fintech platforms, ethical marketplaces, digital zakat and waqf solutions, and halal innovation hubs. These ventures are not only modernizing access to Islamic economic tools but also demonstrating how values-based entrepreneurship can contribute to local economies, global impact, and inclusive prosperity.

OBJECTIVES OF THE SUMMIT:

Encourage academic and industry-led research on the impact of Islamic economics on global development agendas.

Analyze the current landscape and growth futures of the Islamic economy within non-Muslim majority countries.

Identify key enablers and barriers for the adoption of Islamic financial services in secular and pluralistic markets.

Highlight the contribution of Muslim communities, entrepreneurs, and professionals to the development of Islamic economy frameworks in non-Muslim societies.
